Feng Shui Brandon - The oriental concept of Feng Shui plainly translates to "wind and water." This complicated idea is more simply understood than it is defined or pronounced. Feng Shui has to be experienced so as to completely know its ramifications on the human spirit. The intangible energy called chi is ever present and surrounds the meaning and the application of Feng Shui. While it is elusive, chi is all over in the world and is considered one's aesthetic periphery. Feng Shui reveals itself in our outlook concerning landscape and regarding life. It is the framework we place either unconsciously or consciously around our lives.

According to the customs in the Orient, object placing like for example graves, furniture and buildings is based on the patterns recognized through the flow of yin and yang and chi. Together, yin and yang energies produce both negative and positive effects. Feng Shui is made up of five elements. These elements are earth, wood, water, metal and fire. They blend in their own certain ways in order to produce either destructive or positive cycles. In order for optimum Feng Shui to be acquired in whichever room, all of the five elements would be involved without being overpowered by any one of them individually.

Like for instance, if metal elements as in modern furniture pieces dominate an area, the effect can be balanced by placing wood elements to the room like for example green plants. Candles can likewise be included in order to form the fire component. If applying Feng Shui as a design feature in anybody's house, it is essential to utilize natural substances when possible. The double aspects of yin and yang always reign supreme in Feng Shui because the basic aim is to be able to create a harmonious balance between natural items and human beings.

The bedroom is considered one of the more vital rooms in any house. The bedroom is crucial to the flow of energy throughout the house. Beds themselves are believed to have power places as well. Some ancient Asian philosophy believe that the energy from somebody who ever slept in a bed leaves a residue. For optimum Feng Shui, how the bed is positioned in relation to the bedroom door must be considered. The door has to always be seen from the bed. If the door is not seen from the bed, anyone could make use of a mirror in such a way that it will reflect the door. This will restore Feng Shui.

Feng Shui connects landscapes and life together and all things in life depend upon each other. The Oriental way of thinking believes the landscape is a breathing and living entity. There are a lot of aspects concerning heaven and earth and humanity that the Western world could think about as individuals in the east do. Just as Shakespeare said in Hamlet, "There are more things in heaven and earth, my dear Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy."
